Have you heard about the Revised Roman Missal? (#3 in a series of 12)
Is the Roman Missal the large red book currently used by the priest on the altar? Not quite. This red book is currently called a Sacramentary. It contains all the prayers of the Mass. This includes the prayers of both the priest and the assembly. The Lectionary is the large book which is currently carried in the entrance procession and placed on the lectern/ambo. Both the Sunday edition (which is red) and the weekly edition (which is green) contain all the scriptural readings of the Mass, including the First and Second Reading, the Responsorial Psalm and the Gospel. Together, these two books - the Sacramentary and the Lectionary - make up the Roman Missal. From the time of the Council of Trent in 1570, these collections were all together in one large book, but as readings and prayers were added, the book became too large and impractical and was broken up into the individual books we have today. However, the term Misssale Romanum is still used to describe the Latin edition of what we have been calling the Sacramentary. When current revisions are completed, this book - the Missale Romanum - will be translated as Roman Missal.
